Salt and Light of the World

Carrying global connotations of universal superabundance in land and sea, salt is still one of the cheapest items on the family shopping list. However, hidden in its cheap commonality, that insignificant and harsh-tasting substance holds a universal potential for goodness, healing, and wellbeing, drawing and preserving excellence and adding richness as no other element or ingredient is capable of providing.

That is what Jesus is driving at in addressing us as salt. Hidden in our ordinary, unassuming, and even unrecognized selves, God sees preciousness, richness and great potential. We may not think much of ourselves, feeling helpless in our needs and incapable of reaching out to others, but God still thinks us precious, a valuable and necessary commodity for his mission of healing, peacemaking, and life-giving. God needs us to achieve his plans precisely through our weakness, helplessness and the ordinary unpretentious routine of daily life. That is our identity in God's eyes and dream.

The Christian is one who affects and infects others with joy, hope, healing and a taste for life, or our claim to faith is useless empty words. Nevertheless, as for the ubiquitous use-by-date, Jesus warns us that salt can become tasteless through abandonment or lack of use and its potential is lost. We may resent being qualified as useless, but that is just what Jesus calls us when we stifle the potential that God has gifted each of us. Unless this giftedness is released to bring out the taste of life around us, we both vilify our God-given energy to touch others, and our very lives become meaningless, choked by unimaginative self-preoccupation and loneliness.

Like the flickering light that breaks the darkness and brings warmth to cold hearts, the personal experience of darkness can ignite a conflagration of rich humanism, and committed solidarity, a beacon on the hill screaming hope and courage. By accepting the insignificance of one's saltiness and yet reach out to others in self-giving, as believers we have no choice but let light and warmth well up from that inner energy for good that dwells deep in our heart and enable the conflagration of God's love to explode into every life that intertwines with our journey

Jesus is very direct and personal:

You are salt and flickering light—that is our identity and our mission. Anything else is useless and good for nothing.

The disciple cannot be otherwise, because God names us by those very elements of life and wants us to be energy of salt and light to the whole world in spite of and beyond the signs of death and darkness in a world that yearns for God's dream of peace, joy, and selfless, eternal and unconditional love.
